HICKMAN, FULTON COUNTY, KENTUCKY, FRIDAY, JULY 21, 1882.

ROW THE WIND BLOWS. One night fittle Annie kept watching the W2:24 regard weiting for some one to knock; But when Willy stood on the kitchen floor, She was far more busy than ever before.

She had not a moment in which to talk, And she did not care for a moonlight witk; The milk was to strain, little Anne said, And the yeast to set for to-morrow's bread. But Love is so blind, and Wilt wouldn't see That Aoule was cold as a girt could be; He had come to woo, and he wished to slay, Though Aunto was wishing him far away.

So he lingered on till young Robin came; Little Annie blushed when she hourd his name. She bid him come in, with a sinile and u sigh; She glunced at him off with a kindly eye. Asshe cheerfully hurried with hands and feet, She usked him after his sheep mul his wheat; And many and sweet were the words she said, As she strained the milk and leavened the bread,

Then Willie saw things in a clearer light: He warehed them awhile, and said: "Good-
